

SPLASH LANDING

During Winter Carnival's annual polar bear plunge back in February, 466 people—most of them students—voluntarily jumped in frigid Occom Pond.

Despite temperatures in the teens, the number of participants was second highest in the event's history.

COMPILED BY MARLEY MARIUS '17 AND LEXI KRUPP '15
DRAWN BY PETER ARKLE

I'm excited.

I'm so terrified.

I need a drysuit!

I didn't even read the waiver.

I think it just says 'don't die.'

We could always just SAY we did it.

It wasn't so bad actually.

It was cold but I have a car, so I'm going to leave now.

Do it, it's awesome.

Do you have a waiver?

Can everyone swim?

No diving. That's the only rule.

Always a good question to ask.

Some say they 'did it for the pin.' Others could care less.

Wooooo!!!

No one can go on the ice unless you're jumping!

My booty is COOOOOOLD!

Try to keep it moving please.

I'm telling you now that you can't do it in jeans, it's a bad idea.

It huuuurts!

What if it's just a giant hot tub in the ice?

↑
Warming Stations

I'm seriously questioning your sanity.

Senior year we're going to do it.

My body is on fire.

WINTER CARNIVAL

I think someone took my pants.

It wasn't that bad, the worst part was just my feet sticking to the ground after.

We're going to have a lost and found in Collis.

We'll probably do it next year.

That was AWESOME. That was so FUN.

I've never felt so alive.

Take good pictures so that I can have this moment for life.

I can't feel my fingers!

Let me get a picture of you steaming.